

Madadh Richey is Postdoctoral Research Associate in Hebrew Bible in the Department of Religion at Princeton University. Her current book project, Visions of Gods and Monsters explores the social functions of divine-combat images in the visual art of the Levant and Mesopotamia during the first millennium BCE. In addition to her work on the Hebrew Bible, she publishes on inscriptions in older Northwest Semitic languages, including new texts from modern-day Israel, Syria, and Turkey, as well as forgotten sources for Aramaic-language magic.